THE ZOOLOGIST'S WOOING.

When first I saw you bland deer,

My heart it did rejoice;

Because I saw how good you were,

And wished that you were mine.

When I your tail finches pressed,

Upon that eve in May,

The glance you gave me sealed my fate

And I'm still yours to-day.

I'll never break apart the lynx

That bind my heart to thee,

Till I shall see my last couch

And in my grave reclie.

Dear, bland deer, upon me now!

(That's what I please you)

One glance from your bright eyes will light

This moldering fire anew.

And if it is for porcupine,

Though it should rule me,

I'll follow you to any haunts you

As one could wish to see.

But, then, of course, weak antelope,

For that would be a bore;

But we can stay right here rat alone,

And I'll never leave you more.

CANON FARRAR.

As a preacher, Canon Farrar enjoys a reputation not inferior to that which he has acquired as a writer. His singular charm of delivery, his clear incisive voice, and the dramatic power of his sermons, are of themselves attractions sufficient to crowd the Abbey to its utmost capacity of standing room whenever he occupies his pulpit. But the true secrets of his remarkable popularity lie, perhaps, deeper still. The many generosity which led him, on the last anniversary of American Independence, to admit from the Abbey pulpit the folly of the course which alienated the American colonies from the mother country a century ago, and at
